Homemakers Items

If you are planning a picnic in the woods, be sure all debris such as dried leaves, twigs, moss, and pine needles are cleared away from the fire area in advance. If the fire spreads to surrounding litter, it can keep on spreading rapidly.

If you don't have a French ball cutter to make melon balls, the teaspoon measure from your set of metal measuring spoons is a good substitute.

Frosted grapes lend one of the coolest touches to a summer fruit salad. Dip a small cluster of grapes first into lemon juice, and then into granulated sugar. Set them on waxed paper until they're dry.

These can be added to your favorite fruit salad. You might use pale-green slices of honeydew melon with cottage cheese and red raspberries or blueberries in peach halves. Surround them with the frosted grapes.

A little powdered mustard, a few drops of onion juice, or a liberal sprinkling of paprika will add to the flavor of fried chicken.

Protect your clothes while traveling. Wrap powder, perfume, medicine in aluminum foil to protect clothing. Use foil, or plastic freezing bags, for wrapping wet washcloths or bathing suits.

On an auto trip, keep a wet washcloth wrapped in foil or plastic in the glove compartment to clean children's hands en route.

Oakville

Oakville, July 29.- The Oakville Home Demonstration Club will have its annual picnic Wednesday, Aug. 6, at 6:30 o'clock, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. O. W. Martin, Jr.

Mr. and Mrs. Clarke Moore add grandson, "Doug," visited Mr. and Mrs. James D. Martin Sunday afternoon.

The Goodmans had a reunion Sunday afternoon, and most all of the relatives around and in Oakville attended.

Little Karen Jordon is spending this week with her grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Louis Moore.

We hear that Everett Moore, who has been in service overseas, will return home this week. We will surely be glad to see him.

Mr. and Mrs. Willie Sneed, of West Virginia are spending two weeks with Mrs. Maggie Gardner and Miss Ethel Gardner.

Health and Beauty

You do have less free-wheeling surplus energy if you are over 35. You have slowed up a little and you may as well face it. Generalizations of course don't always apply. One person of 45 can have more energy left than an average 20-year-old to begin with. Another may have less at 50 than a 70-year-old. It depends on the person.

Studies show that it is possible to compensate for the slight drop in energy by more know-how and experience. You make fewer wasted motions, you put more value on your time. For you, time seems to be rushing by faster than it did.

It is true that faster-living organisms, like a fly, think a day is much longer than does a slower living mechanism, like an elephant. To the hopped-up insect, a day seems plenty long for a life-time. He buzzes around thinking he has eons to waste.

After your metabolism rate drops your time sense speeds up, a day seems shorter to you and tomorrow is always upon you. It is hard to get as much done in a day as you did before, and you may have the feeling that you never complete your job. The trick is to know that this is natural, and not to expect quite as much of yourself as you did a few years ago.

Pushing yourself past your energy may be all right once in a great while, but a steady diet of this treatment, and your body will pay.

The middle years should be a period of inventiveness when a man is best able to try out new and original ideas.

Try to relax and be yourself. Do some of the things you have always wanted to do, but never had the nerve or the time.

The Mighty Mouser

Juliaetta, Idaho.- That Gene Groseclose has a mighty mouser has been established beyond a doubt. His cat would haul mouse and rat in to Groseclose, showing off her prize in return for an extra rub behind her ear.

The other night, Groseclose got up to let puss in, then went back to bed.

Up came puss on the bed. Out went Groseclose like a shot.

Wiggling in the jaws of the mighty mouser was — a 2-foot-long rattlesnake!

About The Home

By Frances Dell

A zigzag stitcher or a straight stitcher, a cabinet or a portable type — these are questions often asked by women thinking of buying a sewing machine. If you are shopping for a sewing machine there is a wide range available to choose from.

Two questions you might ask yourself to help you make the right decision are: "What kind of sewing do I do, and how often do I use a machine?" If you use a machine for plain sewing without machine made decorative effects, a straight stitching machine will be satisfactory. If you do a great deal of sewing that calls for decorative stitching and embroidery, a zigzag machine will be useful.

A zigzag type is the more expensive, and you should decide whether you do enough specialty-sewing to warrant the added expense.

You may be trying to decide between a sewing and a portable-type machine; just remember that a good cabinet with well supported leaves and sturdy legs gives good sewing support and is always steady.

Portable machines are handy for people who live where space is limited and for people who move often. Many portables are fitted with an extension table for work surface.

You will have to choose between light-weight and regular-head portable. Your choice will depend on how much sewing or mending of bulky, heavy fabrics you do.

Concrete-Paved Yards Help Boost Farm Profits

Concrete-paved surfaces can pay dividends when used in feeding areas for hogs, steers, dairy cows, and beef cattle, particularly where there is trouble with excessive mud, says G. D. Kite, agricultural engineer at VPI.

Kite says a recent report from the Kentucky Agricultural Experiment Station shows that steers fed on concrete increased daily gains 35% and feed efficiency by 25% over those that stood in the mud. A feed lot for steers should have at least 70 square feet per head, with half the area under roof, the engineer says. The covered area, if well bedded, need not have a concrete floor, but the feeding area should be in concrete.

Faster gains and better feed efficiency are also reported from tests with hog feeding on concrete. Many hog feeders are providing a so-called "pig parlor" or "market hog feeding unit," which includes the concrete feeding floor and shelter to provide 15 to 18 square feet per hog. Half of the area is under roof for protection in the winter weather and shade in the summer. The covered area is usually enclosed on the north and west sides and ends, with the south side open. The uncovered concrete area should be on the south side.

Where permanent outside hay, grain, or silage feeders are situated the area next to the feeders should be of concrete or some hard, durable material. The trench or bunker silo used for self-feeding should certainly have a concrete floor. Kite says, because muddy conditions can become very serious.

Horizontal silos with concrete floors that are wide enough for about 1/5 of the animals to eat at one time are proving successful for dairy and beef cattle. For dairy cows the self-feeding silo should be reasonably close to the barn so it can be connected with a concrete lane.

State Electric Congress Planned in Richmond

Four - H club members from throughout Virginia who have excelled in use of and knowledge about electricity on the farm and in the home will convene in Richmond August 27-29 for the eighth annual State 4-H electric congress.

Dr. W. E. Skelton, state 4-H club agent at VPI, says the highlight of the sessions will be the naming of six boys and six girls as district winners in the electric projects, and of the top individual and top county in the program. The district winners will each receive a 19-jewel watch. The top individual will receive an expenses-paid trip to the National 4-H Club Congress in Chicago in November and the top county will receive a plaque. And cash awards will be given for the best county exhibits.

Registration will begin Wednesday afternoon, August 27. Thursday, the congress will hear reports and see demonstrations by 4 - H club members. District winners will be announced Thursday evening, and on Friday morning will give brief reports on their accomplishments.

Comment On Sports

By Pete Pritchie

Washington.- The football season this autumn should be the most interesting and the most controversial in many years. The reason it will be controversial is that coaches and teams will have a choice for one or two points after touchdowns.

This will lead to a larger crop of Monday morning quarterbacking than ever and also increase the number of second - guessing fans among the alumni influencials. And it should make the game more thrilling.

The fellows who might find it tough going are the professional forecasters, both those who aim to print and those who aim at the betters. It'll be a little more difficult, this first year, in picking the scores and naming the odds. Ties might not be so plentiful and that will affect the averages achieved by the dope sheet types.

The fans will like it, however, in our opinion. A team that can score two points after the TD every time, or just about every time, will have a great asset going. If there is no kicker on the squad that may not be the handicap it once was, for the team can resort to the practiced pass or run.

And, a team trailing by seven can still win with one TD in this ball's business. So a comfortable lead, or at least an average one, is the equivalent to the old eight point lead, will be a nine point lead. (There's no such thing as a comfortable one-TD lead, of course).

The new extra-point rules could give a slight edge to the power game on the mound. For it might not be too difficult for a grinding running attack to carry the ball the short distance for two yards.

There has been some controversy among the smaller schools, and some conferences composed of smaller schools, on adopting the new scoring system. For the good of all concerned, the rules of the NCAA should be followed by all college teams for a trial year at least—even if they are later discarded. There'll be enough confusion as it is.

In Fashion Now

The very latest news of fall collections in the areas of suit and coat trends are quite exciting. Suits will be easy-to-wear and will typify the unconstricted, relaxed look of Chanel. The fabrics will contain such materials as orlon, acrylic fiber, silk, nylon coupled with wool.

The jackets will be straight and classic in cut, with pocket interest. Some suits will feature as many as four bracket-shaped mock pockets. Many of the slim skirts will have front fly closings.

The evening suit is back, and will have an ensemble look. Often it will feature a long, fitted sheath skirt topped by a loose puffed-back middy which accentuates the unusual square-back decolletage. Long, puffy sleeves further carry out the new line.

The full-length cape is a big daytime fashion. In its wake comes the brief capelet, which is emerging as one of the year's important shoulder covers for late-day and evening wear.

The new, longer-length late-day dress will often be topped by a brief shoulder cape banded in fluffy white fox. The little brocade barrel cape, with a high-standing collar, can top a variety of evening and late-day outfits. A striking evening topper is the gold kid-skin capelet, waist-length and with velvet-lined hood.

The long ropes of beads often seen in the past few years are going to be popular again. The reason for this may be the influence of the casual, tweed and jersey look, which calls for this type of jewelry.

The bias cut can flatter the figure in subtle and devious ways. It will be employed in light-weight wool, in fact, in every known fall and winter fabric.
